The Slope button sets the steepness of the current filter, from 6 dB/octave to 96 dB/octave.

In Pro-Q 2, the slope not only applies to the usual Low Cut and High Cut filters, but to all filter shapes! This allows you to make highly surgical adjustments if needed. So for example, you can make ultra-narrow bell or notch filters or very steep shelves.

Note: not all filter shapes support the 6 dB/oct slope setting.

The image shows a screenshot of the Fabfilter Pro-Q 2 software interface. A central white text box explains the 'Slope' button, which sets the steepness of the current filter from 6 dB/octave to 96 dB/octave. It notes that this applies to all filter shapes, allowing for surgical adjustments like ultra-narrow bell or notch filters. A note mentions that not all filter shapes support the 6 dB/oct slope setting. To the right, a vertical menu shows the current slope setting is '6 dB', with other options ranging from +5 to -3. The background features a dark grid with a yellow frequency response curve showing a notch filter. A red circle highlights a peak on the left, a purple circle highlights the notch, and a blue circle highlights a peak on the right.
